As a natural material, the marble features variations in veining and color from piece to piece.

“I really wanted to capture the idea of a small flowing stream making its way through a stony bed with steel and stone.”

DAVID KITTS

“Inspired by the textural variations in slate, I wanted to showcase the stone’s unique surface against an intersecting vertical steel form.”

PAUL MARR HILLIARD

Featuring a unique finial.

“Inspired by nature’s power of rolling waves that can evoke both strength and grace.”

JASON HANCOCK

“Like the tectonic plates that originally formed the supercontinent of Pangea, the forged plates collide and merge forming a unified whole.”

DAVID MARTIN

“I wanted to use our steel hammered twigs in a simple sculptural form reminiscent of environmental artist Patrick Dougherty’s stickwork that I experienced near Middlebury College.”

DAVID KITTS

“My initial idea began with a single curved pencil sketch that evolved to include a rough-textured inner edge, creating a tension between dark and light.”

“Simple, soft forms inspired this design.
‘Yoki’ means goodness, liveliness or cheerfulness, and can also be translated as positive spirit or energy.”

JASON HANCOCK

"I was looking to create something both simple and familiar. For me, the soft glass reminds me of the white-wrapped bails of hay I see scattered throughout the farms in early summer."

“This is my contemporary interpretation of the classic banker’s lamp.”

ANDY MORTER

“This lamp uses conductive steel plates as pathways for electrons to pulse from one end of the LED tube to the other.”

“I’ve always loved the classic tripod floor lamp and was very interested in designing the Hubbardton Forge version of it.”

DAVID KITTS

"I wanted to develop a sculptural floor lamp that complemented the unique Chrysalis glass to form a crystal-like tree."

DAVID KITTS

“I found inspiration in the origami crane.
My goal was to capture the sharp folds, while matching its gracefulness and beauty in this design.”
